Algerian Civil War (1990 - 1998)

The conflict has involved secularist and Islamic political forces. After the Front Islamique du Salut (FIS) won local councils and the first round of national elections in 1990 and 1991 respectively, the ruling state party, Front Libération National (FLN) dissolved Algeria's parliament and suspended the constitution and the army council took over the reins of government. After protests by FIS, the military regime imposed a state of emergency, effectively triggering off a bloody civil war as Islamist militias rose in opposition. The FIS split, and the breakaway Groupe Islamique Armé (GIA) became known for some of the most violent anti-government actors. Violence peaked in 1995 after the military candidate won in presidential elections. Heavily pressured by the military, FIS-loyalists declared a ceasefire in 1997 and after presidential elections in 1999, President Abdelaziz Bouteflika enacted a new amnesty law, which saw the number of insurgents shrink dramatically. By 2002, the GIA was effectively beaten militarily, however, various small Islamist groups continue to operate in the region.

State definition

Nature of state (general) Page 1, INTRODUCTION:
Since Algeria recovered its sovereignty and independence, the culmination of the aspirations and incessant struggle of the national movement and the November revolution, the country has undergone profound change, both physically and in terms of its social, cultural and human development.

This is only possible within a democratic and republican political system guaranteed by a Constitution which is both a reference and a stabilising anchor enforceable in respect of everyone and where everyone has the same status.

Page 5, ORGANISATION OF ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, CHAPTER 1 - GENERAL PROVISIONS, Article 3:

The transitional period aims to consolidate and establish permanent constitutional law which shall guarantee:

The transitional organs shall be responsible for creating these conditions, and their organisation and operations shall be regulated by the Constitution and by specific provisions foreseen in the transitional platform.

[...]

Clearly the success of the transitional period will depend on the quality of the organs put in place, on the appropriateness of their objectives, but also on the people who shall lead them. It will also depend on the impetus which the national conference is able to bring to the process.

Page 3, OBJECTIVES OF THE TRANSITION, 1 – Political objectives:

The actions to be taken in this area consist of:

- maintaining and developing the gains of the national conference and reinforcing national harmony, by ensuring the smooth functioning of transitional organs, mobilising strong and active social forces and pursuing national dialogue;
- consolidating the structures and restoring the functioning of the State, by a fundamental reform of the administration enabling:
 - effective delivery of the permanent functions of the State,
 - the development of society by responding to the needs of users and ensuring equity for all,
 - respect at all times for the neutrality of the administration.
- improving ethical standards in public life and strengthening monitoring functions;
- specifying these actions in new legal provisions relating in particular to:
 - political party legislation,

Page 6, CHAPTER II. ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, Section 1. The State Presidency, Article 9:

The role of State President is incompatible with any private or voluntary functions. It is also incompatible with any role in a political party or movement.

The Head of Government shall submit the transitional programme for approval to the National Transitional Council.

Page 7-8, CHAPTER II. ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, Section 2. The Government, Article 20:

Without prejudice to any of the provisions foreseen in article 81 of the Constitution, the Head of Government:

- shall be responsible for the general direction and implementation of the transitional programme,

Page 8, CHAPTER II. ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, Section 2. The Government, Article 23:

The role of member of the Government is incompatible with membership of the Transitional Council, and also with any professional function, public or private employment or any responsibility within a political party or association.

Elections

In light of the High State Committee debate no 92-4 of July 2, 1992, concerning the election of the President of the High State Committee;

To emerge from this crisis at the political level, it will be necessary to use the electoral system. The necessary conditions for this are not only political, as well as economic, social and security-related.

[...]

The Constitution remains the normative base for this development. It is the fundamental reference framework which guides public life. However, it has not been fully implemented, given the acknowledged impossibility of organising elections at short notice.

This absence of elected organs means that they shall be substituted during the transitional period.

It is in this regard that a State Presidency and a National Transitional Council are planned, in place of the President of the Republic and the National Popular Assembly, which are not yet elected.

Page 3, OBJECTIVES OF THE TRANSITION, 1 – Political objectives:

The actions to be taken in this area consist of:

[...]

- re-starting the electoral process as soon as possible within a democratic framework, enabling the expression of freely made choices, within a timescale to be determined;

[...]

- specifying these actions in new legal provisions relating in particular to:

- electoral legislation,

Page 10, CHAPTER II. ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, Section 3. The National Transitional Council,

Paragraph 3. Organisation and operation of the National Transitional Council, Article 35:

The President of the National Transitional Council shall be elected by the members of the National Transitional Council for the duration of the period of transition. In case of the resignation or death or definitive obstruction of the President, his replacement shall be appointed in the same way, for the remaining period of the transition.

Page 9, CHAPTER II. ORGANS OF THE TRANSITIONAL PERIOD, Section 3. The National Transitional Council, Paragraph 2. Composition and status of the National Transitional Council, Article 27:

The National Transitional Council shall be made up of two hundred (200) members designated either by the State or their nominating organisation, and appointed by decree for the whole period of the transition.

The National Transitional Council shall be made up of representatives of the following categories: the State, the political parties and economic and social forces.

Representatives of the State shall occupy thirty (30) seats, 15% of the total number. The distribution of the remaining one hundred and seventy (170) seats shall be by mutual agreement between the State and the represented parties, with an equal share for the representatives of the social and economic forces on one hand and for the representatives of political parties on the other.

Civil society

The support of the political, economic and social forces representing society will bring about a necessary strengthening of confidence in the exercise of power and will in general terms help to overcome differences, so that all efforts may be focussed on dealing with the crisis and setting the country on the path to civil peace, democracy and progress.

Page 1-2, INTRODUCTION:

Since Algeria recovered its sovereignty and independence, the culmination of the aspirations and incessant struggle of the national movement and the November revolution, the country has undergone profound change, both physically and in terms of its social, cultural and human development.

While there have undeniably been numerous positive achievements during this phase of construction, nonetheless mistakes and harmful behaviour have seriously damaged the credibility of some institutions and reduced their efficacy to the point of endangering their stability.

Serious difficulties remain at the point at which the national consensus conference is taking place. Some were foreseeable while others are completely unexpected. They still weigh heavily on society and serious differences concerning the approach and solutions to use are hindering resolution of the crisis.
